JACOB BEIDLER.

CATALOGUE

OF THE

JACOB BEIDLER SCHOOL

LIBRARY.

CHICAGO:
1901.

The JACOB BEIDLER SCHOOL, located at Kedzie Avenue and Walnut Street, and formerly known as the CENTRAL PARK SCHOOL, was named by the Board of Education, June 28, 1899, in honor of the late Jacob Beidler, a prominent citizen of Chicago, by whose bounty the school has been recently supplied with over 1300 volumes of books here catalogued, and with a large number of pictures.

This catalogue also includes the reference books and a few others previously belonging to the school, and a list of supplementary reading now in use. Any seemingly unnecessary repetition in the list is a concession to the convenience of the boys and girls for whom this catalogue is chiefly intended.

A section of the library has been placed in each school room above the third grade, with a group of professional books for teachers in the office—our idea being to make the circulation and use of the books as convenient and informal as consistent with proper care.

We trust that all who use a book will treat it as a good friend, and after reading return it promptly for another to read, and so co-operate in making the best use of the opportunity so generously provided.

JAMES C. ALLING,

PRINCIPAL.

NOTE.—Look for an author, title, topic or subject in its alphabetical order.

The bold face type indicates an author. Under each author's name will also be found a list of his works contained in the library. After the title of a book the surname of the author is printed in SMALL CAPITALS.

Return the book within two weeks: others wish to read it; you may draw it again. Keep it clean.
